What is a Deemed-to-Comply Application?

The Deemed-to-Comply Application process has been developed to assist landowners and applicants working with any of the above forms of development to check whether or not a development application is necessary.

All forms of development not listed above (i.e. grouped dwellings and multiple dwellings), or listed above but do not meet the criteria, require development approval from the Town.

Building Permit Applications

The processing of building permit applications does not involve the assessment of the proposed development from a town planning perspective, as such, there is the necessity to ensure that it complies with the applicable provisions of the Local Planning and Council policies, as well as the Town's local planning scheme prior to the building permit being determined.

It is therefore a requirement that as part of a building permit application written confirmation is provided by a qualified Town Planner, or other class of competent person (as determined by the WA Building Commission), that development approval is not necessary. This can be provided by the Town via the Deemed-to-Comply Application process.

Alternatively, if a development approval is required, a copy of the development approval issued for the proposal is to be provided with the building permit application.
